TIME

Fri May 16th – Sun May 18th 2007

Aims of the conference

- Discussing the issues of cultural transfer and globalization of a hallucinogenic plant potion
- Comparing ritual settings in different parts of the world
- Defining the most effective dimensions of traditional Ayahuasca rituals and their transformations in (post)modern societies
- Discussing the role of experiential dimensions in ritual
- Promoting a biopsychosocial approach
- Creating an interdisciplinary dialogue between researchers and experts from medicine, psychology, religious science, anthropology and state institutions
- Describing the spectrum of Ayahuasca users and the altered states they experience
- Giving impulses for the dialogue between practicing groups and state institutions
- Interdisciplinary publication (to be finished by Nov 15th 2008)

Outline

Ayahuasca is a term which describes a hallucinogenic plant potion that has been used in traditional indigenous cultures of the Amazon. Its pharmacological ingredients differ, but always contain Banisteriopsis caapi and mostly a DMT-containing additive (most frequently chacruna leaves). From the beginning of the 20th century on a number of religious and other cultural groups have integrated this potion into different non-indigenous cultural settings, including psychotherapeutic treatments. In Brazil three different churches have developed which use this plant as a religious sacrament, at least two of these churches (the Santo Daime and the UDV) have branches in several countries in the world.

From the 1990ties on Ayahuasca has migrated more quickly into the globalizing world. Since this time interdisciplinary scientific studies have increased and institutions of different states have dealt with the question of positioning Ayahuasca within their legal systems. Medical, juridical and religious questions have to be addressed, basic information on the substance, institutions and groups which use Ayahuasca have to be spread and discussed on national and international terms. There is significant confusion and contradiction considering the politics of international and national institutions dealing with Ayahuasca “cases”, which have been dealt within the legal system or in public.

The conference is supposed to create a dialogue between different groups engaged with the Ayahuasca phenomenon. Understanding the phenomenon is important for creating local policies and addressing the stigmatization of its users. Representatives of the Santo Daime Church from Brazil and Germany will give an example of their religious practice and legal situation.

State-of-the-art knowledge on medical, psychological and cultural background of the phenomenon will be presented and discussed with the participants.

A longitudinal study with European Ayahuasca drinkers which is located at Heidelberg University since 2003 will present its results on the psychological and biographical development of its study participants.

Questions addressed will cover topics like:

- the ritual structures and dynamics as well as the possible “home use” of Ayahuasca
- the struggle between “modernity” and traditional heritage in Ayahuasca ritual
- the relevance of ritual settings to the social acceptance of Ayahuasca use
- the medical and social risk assessment of Ayahuasca use
- the use of Ayahuasca in healing within and outside of medical contexts
- the recursive use of scientific knowledge within some practicing groups
- the question of authenticity and hybridity in the ritual settings of the practicing Ayahuasca groups within and outside of Brazil
- religious tolerance and dogmatism within and outside of the Ayahuasca communities
- the meaning of altered states of consciousness for the broader study of religion
- current distribution of Ayahuasca use in Europe and the United States
- structures of and conflicts within the user groups in European contexts
- next steps in scientific investigation of the Ayahuasca phenomenon

Creating a critical dialogue

In order to create a critical dialogue we want to invite several persons concerned with Ayahuasca from different fields of society.

We will have a “reflecting team” within the conference that will comment on each of the five sections with from a certain viewpoint before or while we discuss the presentations. For example:

- public health, addiction and drug education
- freedom of religion and basic rights
- spirituality and traditional religion
- controlled substances legislation
- ...
